Australian Prelate's Reference to President Brings Cries of 'Never Again.'

'Archbishop Says a Plebiscite Here Would Show Majority for Free Ireland.

It seemed for a time last night af if Madison Square Garden were doomed to destruction when Archbishop Daniel J. Mannix of Australia, flanked by Arch-bishop Patrick Hayes of New York and Eamonn De Valera, President of the un-recognized Irish Republic, stepped forward upon the platform at the opening of the civic reception to the prelate from Super-excited sons and daughters of Erin, packed into the huge hall until they fitted only with indrawn breaths, were endeavoring with voices, waving American and Irish flags, elbows, knees and stamping feet, to express their ad-miration for the stanchest champion in the Antipodes of the unrecognized repub-Outside some 200 policemen were having troubles of their own to restrain thousands of other would-be admirers from getting within shouting distance of the distinguished guests.

Although officially a civic reception tendered to Archbishop Mannix by the archdiocesan reception committee, the meeting was actually the wilder kind of an Irish republic rally, and the pre-late from Australia led the way. He and Mr. De Valera, both spare men well over six feet, grave of expression and ready in speech, were the speakers, while Archbishop Hayes, who presided, contented himself with a short address which left no doubts as to where he stood in the matter of the Irish republic. In his address Archbishop Mannix mentioned the name of President Wilson and aroused a storm of hisses and booings almost equal to that accorded Premier Lloyd George, but nowaire near that caused by reference to England.

Hisses for Wilson.

arI have had no welcome to this coun try from President Wilson, but I have had from those who made him President and who may again make nim President," Archbishop Masnix said. Arcidst the hisses were shouts of "Never again."
In speaking of his intended trip to

It has been suggested that I shall not be permitted to land on British soil, I have no intention of landing on British soil, for I'm going to land on the ground of the Irish Republic.

We are not here because we're ene mies of England, or because we hate the British people, but because we love Ireland. We're here because we are not hypocrites who say one thing and mean another. We are here because we have no favorites among the tyrants and, in consequence, want to apply President Wilson's principles to Eng-land and Ireland as well as to Ger-

But even if he had forgotten them President De Valera remembers them, and so does Ireland. The British accepted those fourteen principles when they were, as they said, with their backs to the wall, and they would have accepted 400."

Archbishop Mannix declared that a plebiscite of the American people, he felt sure, would reveal an overwheiming Cary T. I can't speak of your politicians or conventions, but I have seen more of the American people and of this country than most Americans during my trip across the continent, and I say without hestitation that a plebiscite would show they favored Ireland."

De Valera Wildly Cheered.

President De Valera, who was cheered eleven minutes despite his earnest efforts to get a hearing, opened his address by a greeting in Gaelic. He declared he would be gind to tell the people of Ireland that he had not over party of six when an automobile going stayed his welcome in New York, and in the same direction sideswiped them added that he had not been driven out causing the car to turn over. of Ireland and that he would go back

Australia of the Guaranty Trust com-pany of New York, writes as follows about present conditions in the Commonwealth:

"The drought still continues over the greater part of Australia. For many months past in all parts of Australia the expedient of lopping trees, shrubs, &c., as food for the sheep and cattle in place of grass has been resorted to, and now even the substitute is giving out.

"Sydney markets lately have been in a very unsettled condition. Higher prices for finished goods go hand in hand with increasing scarcity of stocks and occasional depression in the mar-kets for raw materials. Costs of pro-duction continue to rise, but the volume of imports keeps falling month by month out of all proportion to the increased local output. Scarcity of stocks, to-gether with the £28,000,000 of spending money, which is Australia's war gratulty to her soldiers, naturally keeps prices

"The final returns of the results of the New South Wales wheat harvest for the season 1919-20 show that only 4,296,000 bushels of wheat have been produced, which is very little more than one-third of the State's requirements for its own consumption and for seed. -314 - 35 - 16 +1 To Make Matches in Far East. A company has been formed at Kuala ampur, F. M. S., by a group of British capitalists to manufacture matches. The match business of the Far East used be dominated by Swedish manufacturers. but in the early '90s Japan undertook their manufacture, and soon dominate the market. It is expected that the new British company will offer keen competition for the Japanese. To encourage this new company it is proposed to put an import duty on matches.
